The KINDNESS Web site is intended to help you access KINDNESS information and services easily. We need you to be responsible for doing your part to protect your personal information, and to understand that the educational information and materials made available through the KINDNESS Web site are not and do not include medical advice and are not designed or intended to address your personal health condition or issues.

Users therefore must be responsible for the following:

3.1. Maintain and Protect Your Own Equipment

The KINDNESS site is intended to be accessible and all content available through all standard commercial Web browsers operating on standard personal computers, through standard commercially available Internet access. The quality of content presentation and download speeds may vary depending on the software, equipment and Internet connections used.

You may be able to use devices other than a personal computer to access the KINDNESS site, such as some personal digital assistants (“PDAs”), cell phones or other devices. If you do choose to use another kind of device to access the KINDNESS site, you must be responsible for protecting it in accordance with these Terms of Use. Any requirement for personal computer protection in these Terms of Use applies equally to any other device you may use to access the KINDNESS site.

- KINDNESS does not provide any software, equipment or Internet connections. You are solely responsible for providing all software, computer equipment and other hardware, and Internet connections necessary to access the KINDNESS site.
- Some features on the KINDNESS Web site allow you to create an online account. Your personal computer may store and automatically upload your username and password for account access. You may also download information from the KINDNESS site to your personal computer. If someone else uses your personal computer, he or she may be able to use these functions to gain access to your account or personal information. KINDNESS cannot prevent or be responsible for protecting your personal computer against unauthorized use. You are solely responsible for protecting the personal computers or other devices you use against unauthorized use to access your account.
- If you use a personal computer or other device provided by or shared with your employer, parent, spouse, roommate or other person, that other party may have the legal right to view all information stored on it. KINDNESS cannot prevent or be responsible for such activities. If you use a personal computer or other device which another person has the legal right to control, you access your KINDNESS account at your own risk.
- Whenever you are finished using the KINDNESS Web site you should log off the Web site, and you should not leave your computer unattended when it is logged on to the Web site and someone else may be able to view the screen or use the computer. If you leave a KINDNESS Web site session logged-in when someone else can see your computer screen or use your computer, he or she may be able to gain access to your account or personal information. KINDNESS cannot log you off your computer or protect your personal computer against unauthorized access. You are solely responsible for protecting the personal computers or other devices you use against unauthorized use to access your account.
- Computer viruses, worms, spyware and other malicious software on your computer can be used to gather passwords and personal information from that computer, often without the user’s knowledge. KINDNESS cannot prevent or be responsible for detecting or removing malicious software on computers you use to access the KINDNESS site. Affordable antivirus and antispyware software are readily available for personal computers. You should maintain and regularly use current antivirus and antispyware software on any personal computer you use to access the KINDNESS site.

- Unauthorized individuals (“hackers”) and malicious software can sometimes gain access to computers through Internet connections, unless the computer has a working firewall. Unauthorized access of this kind may not be easily detected and may allow passwords and personal information to be gathered without the computer user’s knowledge. KINDNESS does not provide and cannot be responsible for implementing a firewall for your computer. Firewall software is standard on many personal computers and affordable firewall software for personal computers is readily available. You should maintain a working firewall on any computer you use to access the KINDNESS site.
- Computer criminals may sometimes send e-mails which appear to come from legitimate organizations. These e-mails typically ask you to log on to a Web site using a link in the e-mail, and enter some personal information to “verify,” “correct” or “update” your account, or something similar. This practice is known as “phishing,” and is intended to get personal information from unwary users to use for identity theft and other fraud. You may receive emails from KINDNESS if you consent to receive them, about KINDNESS events and opportunities to donate.

If you receive any suspicious e-mail which claims or appears to be from KINDNESS and you would like to verify its authenticity, please notify us by calling KINDNESS at 907-539-2660.

3.2. Protect Your Password

If the KINDNESS website allows user accounts, access to your account and to personal information about you on the KINDNESS Web Site is password-protected. If your password is easy to guess, or if you share your password or someone else sees or steals it, someone else may be able to get access to your account. Please use a strong password, and protect it from other people.

KINDNESS relies upon your password in allowing access to your account and cannot prevent unauthorized access if your password is compromised. You are responsible for all activity taking place under your password unless we have been notified that it is compromised. Please notify us at once if you believe your password has been compromised, and we will help you change it. You can contact us about possible password compromise at 907-539-2660.
